The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1-6 and 8-12 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Burns et al. in view Vice.

The relevance of Burns et al. has been explained in the first Office action. The applicant has argued that the inductors of Burns et al. are not coupled by mutual inductance or magnetically coupled as claimed. Vice discloses in fig. 1 a differential amplifier (that may comprise bipolars – see paragraph 10) including a transformer T1 comprising mutually coupled inductors connected out of phase to the transistors. It would have been obvious to replace the inductors of Burns et al. with the transformer of Vice, because this is just the use Vice teaches for his invention; paragraphs 2-3 of Vice describe the prior art differential amplifier having individual inductors and paragraph 4 discloses the improvement by using mutually coupled inductors.

Claims 7 and 13 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Burns et al. in view of Vice as above in further view of Brown.

The difference between Burns et al. in view of Vice and the claims is the buffer claimed; as already described in the first Office action, Brown discloses just such a buffer in fig. 16 connected to the collectors of an inductively loaded differential amplifier 929,930. It would have been obvious to connect such a buffer to the outputs of the differential amplifier of Vice for isolation or impedance matching for instance.
